

Hult offers free ongoing professional development for MBA program graduates: an innovative solution for business school graduates looking to stay up-to-date with current trends.

BOSTON, Mass., March 31, 2009 - Hult International Business School, the world's first global business school, announced today that it is offering its MBA program alumni a unique opportunity to maintain their business knowledge throughout their careers. Going forward the school has taken the unprecedented step of giving all of its 4,500 MBA degree holders the option of returning regularly to join elective classes for free.

Hult graduates can take one MBA elective course per year for the rest of their career. They will receive a certificate for each elective course completed.

Robin Nurse, Director of Hult's MBA Career Services, comments, "In today's fast moving environment, business school graduates need to continually upgrade their skills to stay competitive. This is particularly important in an economic downturn, since many employers carefully evaluate their talent base."

Hult, the first corporate university in the U.S., offers electives at its campuses in Boston, London, Dubai and Shanghai. Alumni can take advantage of this global footprint by choosing to participate in free electives at any campus.

Dr. Richard Joseph, Hult's Dean, says, "This offer follows the school's mission to provide an enduring and relevant business education. Our international campuses enable graduates to study wherever is most convenient for them, or in a location they would like to understand in more detail. Many students already participate in our Shanghai MBA program so they can fully understand the business opportunities in China."

Hult's one-year MBA already offers the highest return on investment of any top-ranked MBA program. This opportunity for graduates to maintain their business knowledge for free after graduation further strengthens Hult's position.

Robin Nurse adds, "Typically schools charge around US$2,500 per elective. So this new program can literally save alumni tens of thousands of dollars over the course of their career. I know of no other business school which offers their alumni such a valuable professional and networking opportunity."
